* Founding Scholarship  ♦ New Scholarship
Arnold and Hazel Donald came together to Washington University from Carleton College. As students in the Dual Degree Engineering Program, Arnold earned a degree in mechanical engineering and Hazel earned a degree in systems science and mathematics. In his last year at WashU, Arnold helped found the Society of Black Engineers, now called the National Society of Black Engineers (NSBE). Arnold is chief executive of Carnival Corporation, chair of the McKelvey School of Engineering National Council, and a former member of the Washington University Board of Trustees. Arnold and Hazel have supported more than a dozen engineering scholarship students over the past decade.

Michael Pichardo is the John and Diane Altmix Scholar. He is a senior from Miami, Florida and is double majoring in systems science and engineering and finance. As a student at Washington University, Michael co-founded the Society of Hispanic Professional Engineers and served as the organization’s co-president for three years. He also participates in Zeta Beta Tau Fraternity and Club Soccer. He hopes to move back to Miami after graduation and work in consulting.

After starting and selling several successful companies, Michael Lefenfeld is currently serving as the CEO of Cyanco, the world’s largest producer of sodium cyanide. Michael earned his bachelor’s degree in chemical engineering from Washington University in 2002. He earned his master’s degree from Columbia University in 2005. As a former scholarship recipient, Michael appreciates the opportunity to pay it forward. Emma McMillian is the 2019 Lefenfeld Family Scholar from Chevy Chase, MD. She is a first-year student earning a degree in computer science.

Brent Ramerth earned his bachelor’s degree in Applied Science from Washington University in 2007, and his master’s degree in 2008 from the University of Arizona. A native of Chandler, Arizona, Brent was recruited to Washington University as part of the Langsdorf Scholars Program. He and his wife, Kalinda Lisy, fund the Ramerth Family Langsdorf annual scholarship. They are currently building an endowed scholarship fund as well. Brent is a Software Engineer for Apple in the San Francisco area. Kalinda has worked for community organizations providing social services to the elderly.
Pictured above with Dean Aaron Bobick (left) during the dedication of the Young Archway on campus, Peter Young is the chief executive officer for Chemcentral Group, the first paper and paper processing service agency in China. Peter earned a bachelor’s degree in chemical engineering from Washington University in 1980 and currently serves on the McKelvey Engineering National Council. He and his wife Lin support Washington University because they believe the university provided Peter with a winning combination: a strong technical foundation in engineering and an ability to work with many people from different backgrounds. They have been supporters of the Scholars in Engineering Program for 10 years. The Youngs are members of the Danforth Circle Chancellor’s Level and Life Benefactors of the Eliot Society.
Legacy Scholarships

Created through the generosity of sponsors who are no longer living, these scholarships are held in perpetuity for the purpose of providing financial aid to students in the McKelvey School of Engineering according to the donors’ wishes.
